Jones Lang LaSalle Will Turn Out the Lights in San Francisco for Earth Hour 2008

SAN FRANCISCO, Mar. 26, 2008 – Jones Lang LaSalle, the leading global real estate services and money management firm and one of the largest third-party property managers in the country, will turn off the lights in four million square feet of downtown San Francisco real estate it manages for one hour in a global effort to reduce energy consumption as part of Earth Hour.

On Saturday, March 29, 2008, at 8 p.m., Jones Lang LaSalle and many of the properties it manages will join thousands of businesses and millions of individuals across the country and around the world to send a powerful message about how people can work together to make a difference.

Jones Lang LaSalle-owned properties in Chicago, San Francisco, Sacramento, Atlanta and Phoenix will participate in Earth Hour 2008, with approximately 35 million square feet of commercial space using only non-essential electricity for 60 minutes.

“We know that an energy-efficient building is a well-run building, and for many years our firm has been a leader in promoting energy-efficient management strategies, products and tools to operate our commercial buildings,” said Dan Probst, chairman of the Global Sustainability Board at Jones Lang LaSalle. “Turning off our lights for Earth Hour is a symbolic gesture for us to show our unwavering commitment to energy efficiency and sustainability.”

An initiative of the World Wildlife Fund (WWF), Earth Hour 2008 is modeled after a successful event held last year in Sydney, Australia where residents and businesses turned off their lights to conserve energy. More than 2 million people participated, as well as major landmarks like the Opera House and Sydney Harbour. The movement gained overwhelming momentum and inspired people around the world, and as a result this year Earth Hour will be observed and celebrated across the globe in more than 20 cities, with the ultimate goal to reduce emissions by 5 percent.

“Our firm has been an advocate for energy efficient commercial buildings for many years because we know it is good business and it is part of being a good corporate citizen,” said John Schinter, president, Energy & Sustainability Services at Jones Lang LaSalle. “We want to help our clients reduce their operational costs as well as their greenhouse gas emissions, and taking part in Earth Hour will help us to achieve that further spreading the word about how important it is to take care of our planet.”

Jones Lang LaSalle has consistently maintained a sophisticated approach to energy efficiency and sustainability, documenting more than $70 million in energy savings over the last two years alone. Although turning out the lights for Earth Hour will make a significant impact on the company’s carbon footprint, it won’t be as simple as flipping the light switches to “off.”

“It’s a complex collaborative effort to coordinate Earth Hour, having to manage issues of occupational health and safety, lighting requirements and individual tenant policies and lease agreements,” said Schinter. “There are well-defined systems and processes in place when managing a building that have to be considered – but we already know it will be a very worthwhile effort for everyone involved.”

Jones Lang LaSalle has more than 800 employees throughout Northern California and manages more than 41 million square feet of the area's most prestigious commercial real estate. In 2006 alone, Jones Lang LaSalle completed more than 4.4 million square feet of lease transactions valued at $415 million on behalf of occupiers, and arranged $1.9 billion of investment sales in Northern California.
